Olarinda Journal—Ralph Loghry of this city is now at liberty under a bond of $1,000 signed by his father, G. E. Lowry and brother, Joseph Lowry, of Valley township to await action by the Page county grand jury on the charge of assault with intent to commit murder by throwing his wife off the bridge over the Nodaway river at the site of the Shambaugh mill near Olarinda. His wife, Beck Loghry, charges him with so doing, and claims that he threw her twenty-four feet into the water below the bridge. She shows some bruises on her arm, which she says were caused by the fall. She and her husband were married in July, 1909, and her husband is suing her for divorce in the Page county district court. She is fighting the divorce and claims not to know why her husband should assault her. It is claimed that she was thrown off the bridge Sept. 7. Her husband was arrested on the 8th inst., by Constable Moseley, and the case was before Justice C. W. Stuart the 11th and 13th inst., when he bound the defendant over. The defendant was released from jail on giving his bond.
