Ralph Loghry was indicted by the Page county grand jury on the charge of assault with intent to commit murder and the case came on for hearing last week. From the evidence it seems that the defendant and his wife were crossing a bridge over the Nodaway near Clarinda and he was accused of pushing her off the bridge into the water below with the intention of committing murder. At the trial of the case the woman went on the stand and testified that she did not know whether he pushed her off or whether she lost her balance and fell over. There was about four feet of water in the creek and the woman floundered around for some time and finally reached the bank and was dragged out by the husband like a drowned rat. She got mighty wet. After hearing her evidence the court decided to throw it out and save further expense.
